Credit Ratings Tutorial Special Report

- Credit ratings express an agency's opinion about an issuer's or issuance's creditworthiness to meet its financial obligations in a timely manner
- The Credit Ratings Tutorial is a query tool for corporate bond market investors and participants
- The purpose of this document is to provide the reader with information on the scales of the different ratings and the correspondence between them, whether long- or short-term, global or national scale
- A very popular query among investors is the global and national scale ratings mapping by agency, as well as long- and short-term ratings on a national scale
- S&P Global Ratings, Fitch Ratings, Moody's Investors Service, HR Ratings and PCR Verum are the rating agencies that participate in the Mexican market with authorization from the National Banking and Securities Commission (CNBV in Spanish)

What are credit ratings? They are opinions about credit risk. Ratings express an agency's opinion about an issuer's or issuance's ability and willingness (creditworthiness) to pay its financial obligations in a timely manner (See "Long-Term Ratings Correspondence Table"). It is worth noting that ratings are not intended as buy or sell securities recommendations, their purpose is to provide investors and market participants with information and an overall approach about the creditworthiness of bond issuers.

Tania Abdul Massih Director of Corporate Debt tania.abdul@banorte.com Who rates? S&P Global Ratings, Fitch Ratings, Moody's Investors Service, HR Ratings and PCR Verum are the rating agencies that participate in the Mexican market with the respective authorization of the National Banking and Securities Commission (CNBV, by its acronym in Spanish). Each agency applies its own methodology to measure credit risk and uses its own scale. Typically, ratings are expressed in letters that range from 'AAA' to 'D'.

What do credit ratings consider? Rating agencies consider both qualitative and quantitative aspects in their analysis, in addition to the credit quality of guarantors, insurance companies and other forms of risk reduction of the obligation and the currency in which it is denominated. The economic environment of the country in which the issuer is located is also considered. (See "Long-Term Ratings and Definitions" page 2)

It is important to mention that the "likelihood of default ratings", 'CCC' levels or lower may differ from the scales presented in other tables inside the document in order to simplify the levels description. How do ratings influence investment decisions? Credit ratings are usually considered by investors when investing in debt securities to estimate the yield on the security appropriate to the perceived level of risk corresponding to its rating. In this way the rating will directly influence the price of the bond, since it corresponds to the present value of the flows (payment of interest and principal) discounted to the yield to maturity ("YTM" = reference rate + surcharge) desired according to the rating level.

What can be qualified? The credit quality of an issuer (sovereign, corporates, government, federal agencies), an issuance or a specific financial program. Also, ratings for Asset Services (Primary or Special), level of sustainability, etc. can be rated by the agencies.

What types of ratings exist? Rating scales can be short- or long-term, unsecured or structured, on a national or global scale and in foreign or local currency, among others. To identify between the different types of ratings, agencies incorporate different nomenclature. For example, when it comes to a structured bond, S&P Global Ratings and Moody's Investors Service incorporate the acronym "sf" (structured finance), Fitch Ratings adds "vra", while HR Ratings and PCR Verum use an "(E)" (structured). The greatest example is the differentiation between global and national scales, since each national scale is identified by the distinctive letters of each country; in the case of Mexico ".mx", "(mex)", "mx" and "M" are used.

What is the Stand-Alone Credit Profile? The SACP refers to the individual credit profile of an issuer; it is the credit level that a rating agency grants about the financial strength of an issuer without considering any extraordinary intervention from its parent, subsidiaries or related government. The SACP does not represent a rating itself, but rather is one of the criteria used to assign ratings to issuers and has no observations or perspectives.

Can ratings be standardized? Some rating agencies (S&P Global Ratings, Fitch Ratings, Moody's Investors Service and HR Ratings) publish correspondence tables to standardize ratings on a global and national scale. It is important to note that national scale ratings are not directly comparable to global scale ratings or to national scale ratings of other countries, however, they are a good indicator with respect to the assessment of the risk of an issuer/issuance in comparison with the global market. On the other hand, there may be a matching exercise between short- and long-term ratings on the same scale, without a direct relationship since the range of options is open to various rating levels varying between rating agencies (See "National and Global Scale Correspondence Tables" page 4 and "Short- and Long-Term Correspondence Tables – Short-Term Definitions" page 5).

What is an Outlook and a CreditWatch? In addition to the issuer and issuance's rating, an outlook is assigned, which can be negative, positive or stable, showing the trend that the rating could follow in a time horizon greater than one year, although it does not necessarily imply an upgrade of downgrade in the current rating. Also, there are special reviews (CreditWatch) with positive, negative or developing implications that indicate the probable direction of a rating in the short-term horizon (approximately 3 months), generally based on one or several specific events, such as an acquisition, a merger or the issuance of debt.
