Banking credit – Remains in negative territory in September

- Today, Banxico published its banking credit report for September 2020
- Banking credit declined 1.6% y/y in real terms, above our -2.0% forecast but below the -1.4% of the previous month
- Looking at the breakdown, the deceleration was due to lower growth in consumer (-10.0%) and corporate (0.0%) loans. Nevertheless, mortgages were slightly stronger at +4.6%
- Non-performing loans improved to 2.3% of the total portfolio, with very marginal adjustments across all sectors contributing to the decline
- We continue expecting banking credit to remain weak in coming months. Nevertheless, the system remains fundamentally solid, with actions from regulators and financial institutions being key to bolster capitalization levels

Banking credit remains at negative territory in the annual comparison in September. In particular, banking credit to the private non-financial sector contracted 1.6% y/y in real terms (see Chart 1), its lowest level since May 2010. This result came in above our expectation at -2.0% but below the previous figure of -1.4%. It should be noted that there isn't a significant impact from annual inflation relative to the previous month, as it actually decreased by 3.5bps, contrasting with latest prints in which there was a negative impact. All in all, we consider the more modest pace of the decline to be somewhat favorable, despite the additional contraction. Nevertheless, we consider that the uncertainty around economic activity and its path going forward continues to weight on credit demand. Specifically, credit to corporates decelerated to 0.0% from +0.1%, now adding five months with a deceleration. We believe this performance is mainly driven by a still risky outlook, with many unknown variables clouding their decisions. Taking a look at the breakdown, only 4 out of the 13 sectors showed a worse performance relative to August, but with a relevant impact from the magnitude and relative weight of the categories. In particular we highlight the deceleration in utilities (+2.0% from +2.9%) and commerce (-9.4% from -7.0%). On the contrary, some of the most improved were mining (-1.9% from -19.4%) and construction (-14.7% from -18.5%), among others, as seen in Table 1.

Mortgages actually accelerated to 4.6% from 4.4% in August. Inside, low-income housing credit continued to speed-up its decline to -14.5%, while loans for the residential sector were better at +6.1%. Meanwhile, consumer credit fell 10.0%, lowest since May 2010. Inside, all major worsened at the margin (Chart 2), highlighting strong decreases in credit cards (-11.6%), personal credit (-19.0%) and others (-14.3%). Meanwhile, durable goods (-1.1%) –driven by other durable goods (+21.3%)– and payroll credits (-5.3%), showed more resiliency. We consider that even with the recent improving in fundamentals, conditions surrounding the pandemic will keep weighing on families' spending decisions, and thus, reflected as a lower demand for credit.

Non-performing loans improve marginally to 2.3% of total loans. Inside, all sectors showed slight improvements, but not being actually reflected due to rounding effects. In particular, corporates stood at 1.7%, with mortgages at 3.2% and consumer loans at 3.6% (Chart 3). We consider that the stability in these figures is largely driven by the refinancing programs approved by the National Banking and Securities Commission (CNBV in Spanish) and other financial authorities such as Banxico and the MoF. Considering that these measures will remain in place for a while, we believe the indicator will continue to show low and stable levels in coming months.

We expect weakness to prevail in banking credit in coming months. Despite the improvement in economic activity in the last few months, conditions remain very challenging, which we believe will weigh on credit demand across most sectors. In addition, and unlike previous crisis, we consider that the outlook going forward is still very uncertain, as there are still many unknows regarding a possible treatment or vaccine against the virus. While there are signs of fatigue, mainly from consumers, we think this will mainly reflect on purchases of non-durable goods and some services, also being carried out with available resources and not incurring in debt to acquire them. In this sense, and as previously mentioned, we believe that it will take some time for conditions to improve enough to instill confidence on consumers. A similar situation might happen with corporates, delaying CAPEX decisions until there is more certainty, possibly only dipping into existing credit lines to face short-term financing needs. Finally, mortgages might be more resilient, as evidenced by today's performance, with their structural nature being more beneficial.

On the financial system overall, latest figures from the CNBV and those within corporate reports suggest good levels of capitalization, aided by the programs outlined above but bolstered by banks themselves. In this context, we consider that the system remains healthy, even despite the massive economic shock at a global and domestic level.

Determination of Target Prices

For the calculation of estimated target prices for securities, analysts use a combination of methodologies generally accepted among financial analysts, including, but not limited to, multiples analysis, discounted cash flows, sum-of-the-parts or any other method that could be applicable in each specific case according to the current regulation. No guarantee can be given that the target prices calculated for the securities will be achieved by the analysts of Grupo Financiero Banorte S.A.B. C.V, since this depends on a large number of various endogenous and exogenous factors that affect the performance of the issuing company, the environment in which it performs, along with the influence of trends of the stock market, in which it is listed. Moreover, the investor must consider that the price of the securities or instruments can fluctuate against their interest and cause the partial and even total loss of the invested capital.
