Main drivers for the financial markets today...

- Stock markets, government bond yields & the USD mixed. Stock markets in Asia down in a al lagged reaction to Bullard's 'hawkish' comments back on Friday, while Europe and S&P futures slightly positive, as these already reacted to these comments on Friday. However, the quick spread of COVID-19's deadly 'Delta' variant is not supporting a very positive environment
- Few drivers in the day, awaiting comments from James Bullard (St. Louis Fed) and John Williams (New York Fed)
- This week the market's attention will focus on monetary policy news, with the decisions of Banxico and the BoE, as well as Hungary, Czech Republic, Thailand, and Philippines. Moreover, comments from several Fed members, highlighting Jerome Powell
- In the US, final GDP and current account (1Q21), durable goods, housing figures, trade balance and personal income/expenditure (May), together with University of Michigan consumer confidence and PMIs (Jun). The Fed will release the results of banks' stress tests
- In addition, the Eurozone will publish consumer confidence, IFO survey and PMIs (Jun). It will also be important to observe the regional elections in France and Christine Lagarde's speech before the European Parliament
- In Mexico, the most important drivers will come from retail sales and the monthly GDP-proxy IGAE (April), unemployment rate (May), inflation (1H-June), as well as Citibanamex's expectations survey
