Financial Markets Daily

Main drivers for the financial markets today...

- Negative stock markets, while government bond yields and USD are up amid stronger conviction about the 'tapering' announcement from the Federal Reserve in November, political impasse in the US about the debt ceiling, renewed increases in European energy prices, and political tension in North Korea
- Senate Republicans blocked a bill yesterday to suspend the debt ceiling until December 2022 and keep the government operating past the end of the fiscal year on September 30. That has left Democrats no alternative but to use a budget procedure that could take around two weeks
- Jerome Powell and Janet Yellen will testify before the Senate Banking Committee today. Likewise, Evans, Bownman, Bostic, and Bullard will participate in other events. As for economic figures in the US, trade balance, house prices, and Conference Board's consumer confidence will be released. We expect the latter to stand at 113pts in September, very close to the previous figure
- Meanwhile, in the Eurozone, Christine Lagarde will testify before the European Parliament
- In Mexico, INEGI released August's employment report. The unemployment rate fell to 4.33%, with 740.7 thousand lost jobs. With seasonally adjusted figures we saw a downward to 4.05% (-3bps)
