Financial Markets Daily

Main drivers for the financial markets today...

- Stock markets lower, government bond vields negative and USD with small changes. Investors remain worried over the effects of a tight monetary stance globally to fight strong inflationary pressures and COVID-19 measures in China
- Attention will center on the Monetary Policy Forum from the ECB in Sintra, Portugal, highlighting today remarks from Christine Lagarde (ECB), Jerome Powell (Fed), Andrew Bailey (BOE), and Agustin Carstens (BIS) in a panel where they will discuss the current economic backdrop and the monetary policy response
- On this same front, we had comments from Loretta Mester (Cleveland Fed; has a vote in the FOMC this year) over her support for another 75bps hike in the following meeting, with the Fed funds rate possibly reaching a level between 3% and 3.5% this year and above 4% in 2023. Later we will also have comments from James Bullard (St. Louis Fed; also with a vote in the FOMC this year) as well as an additional participation from Mester
- In China, President Xi Jinping reaffirmed the "COVID Zero" from his country, calling it the only effective economic route and added that looking for herd immunity would be something unimaginable
- Regarding economic data, confidence data in the Eurozone (both from consumers and on the economy) for June showed a slight moderation. Later today we will be looking into inflation in Germany (June) -after a strong upward surprise in Spain reaching 10.2% y/y- and the third revision for 1Q22 GDP in the US, not expecting changes vs. the previous print. Tonight we will know June's PMIs for China
