Financial Markets Daily

Main drivers for the financial markets today...

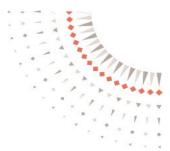

- Stock markets negative, with the USD higher and government bond yields positive amid risk-off sentiment on inflation concerns, global recession risks and Fed officials adamant on further monetary tightening, overshadowing BoE's actions yesterday
- In the UK, Prime Minister Liz Truss stated that her controversial fiscal plan is the "right plan", even despite the recent volatility triggered by it and even with the central bank's intervention yesterday in the bond market. On the war in Ukraine, after the referendum results in occupied zones, it is expected that tomorrow Russia signs treaties to officially annex those regions. This is widely rejected by Ukraine and its allies, with the results being declared illegal by the UN
- On the monetary policy front, we highlight Banxico's decision, expecting +75bps to 9.25%, with the tone remaining hawkish. In the US we will have speeches from Bullard, Mester and Daly. There will also be decisions in Czech Republic, Colombia and India. The PBoC mentioned that they will expand a special lending program to the housing sector
- On economic data, economic confidence in the Eurozone fell for a 7th month in a row to 93.7pts. Later we will have Germany's CPI (Sep) and the third revision to 2Q22 GDP in the US, while China will release official PMIs (Sep)
