Main drivers for the financial markets today...

- Positive stock markets, government bond yields and USD down, and crude-oil prices up, with investors betting that central banks will have to slow the pace of monetary tightening after a lower-than-expected rate hike in Australia, despite tensions between North Korea and Japan over a ballistic missile test
- North Korea fired a missile over Japan for the first time since 2017, which prompted a public safety warning to be issued by Tokyo. The test in 2017 prompted then US-president Trump to threaten to totally destroy North Korea and led the United Nations to impose tough sanctions
- US will continue consultations with Mexico over its energy policy after completing the time period requested for talks on the trade deal between the two nations rather than immediately requesting arbitration
- Today, market attention will be on speeches by Fed members including Williams, Mester and Daly. Yesterday Williams said the central bank policy is not restrictive, so they still have way to go. In economic data, the US will release factory orders and jobs openings JOLTS for August
