Financial Markets Daily

Main drivers for the financial markets today...

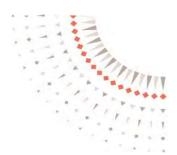

- Positive stock markets (Asia negative), while USD and government bond yields are down with investors attentive to the US inflation data that could determine how much further the Fed's policy-tightening cycle will run, also to the corporate earnings season kick off and its resilience to surging costs. Markets are awaiting G20 central bankers and finance ministers meeting
- In the US, inflation for September will be published, where the attention will be in finding if the downward trend that began in July continues, after the maximum reached in June at 9.1% y/y. We estimate headline inflation at +0.1% m/m, favored by a decline in the price of gasoline, although more moderate than the previous month. With this, the annual variation would stand at 8.1% from 8.3% in August. However, we see pressures on the core, going from 6.3% y/y to 6.6%.
- In other regions, September inflation and trade balance will be published in China
- In Mexico, Banxico's last meeting minutes will be released. We will carefully analyze comments around inflation conditions—both current and going forward—, the influence of the Fed's monetary policy, and to a lesser extent, economic activity. In addition, we will be looking over the likely magnitude of the next move (which we expect at +75bps), as well as the terminal level for the reference rate in this cycle (which we put at 11.00% by the end of 1Q23)
