Financial Markets Daily

Main drivers for the financial markets today...

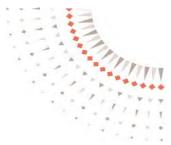

- Stocks markets down (although S&P500 futures positive), USD and government bond yields negative, with investors concerned about strong inflation and restrictive monetary policies, as well as events in the UK with Conservatives lawmakers calling for Liz Truss's resignation, although offset by positive corporate earnings
- US, France, and the UK have requested to the UN Security Council a briefing regarding evidence that Russia has used Iranian-made drones in recent attacks on Ukrainian cities. Meanwhile, Iran continues to deny the use of their weapons in this conflict
- On the monetary policy front, in US we will have speeches from Harker, Jefferson, Cook and Bowman. Yesterday, Bullard expressed that he expects aggressive hikes in the Fed Funds rate to end by early next year and be replaced by small adjustments that maintain the policy sufficiently restrictive as inflation cools down
- On economic data, we expect October's Philly Fed index, anticipating a slight recovery, as well as weekly jobless claims. In Mexico, the Timely Indicator of Economic Activity in September shows null progress (0.0% m/m, 3.3% y/y sa), with mixed signals inside
- Finally, the Central Bank of Turkey announced a 150bps cut to its interest rate, placing it at 10.50%. Meanwhile, in Argentina is expected to hike its rate by 300bps to 48%
