

Financial Markets Daily

December 15, 2022

Main drivers for the financial markets today...

- Negative stock markets, mixed government bond yields and USD up, after the Fed signaled a terminal rate higher than market expectations and Powell's hawkish tone, reaffirming the fight against inflation despite fears of job losses and a recession
- Markets will focus on the European Central Bank's monetary policy decision with the consensus expecting a moderation in the pace of rate hikes with an increase of +50bp, while the Bank of England increased its reference rate to 3.50% (+50bp)
- In the US, the economic agenda includes the reports on retail sales and industrial production for November, where we expect signs of less dynamism. In addition, the Empire Manufacturing and Philly Fed regional indicators for December will be released. We estimate them at 1.0pts and -15.0pts, respectively. Additionally, jobless claims for the week ending December 10 will also be published
- In Mexico, Banxico will have its last monetary policy decision of the year. We expect the central bank to increase its reference rate by 50bp to 10.50%, thus ending the streak of four meetings with a +75bp rise. The cumulative tightening since the beginning of the cycle would add up to 650bp
