Financial Markets Daily

Main drivers for the financial markets today...

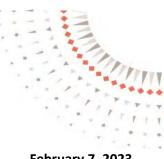

- Mixed stock markets and government bond yields and USD with few changes. The market continues to assimilate the strong US jobs report and comments from Federal Reserve members about the possibility of a higher terminal rate
- All eyes will be on Powell's speech at the Economic Club of Washington today. Speaking later will be Vice President of Supervision Michael Barr. This follows comments from Atlanta Fed's Bostic noting that the strong January jobs report opens up the possibility of a higher terminal rate. While Kashkari of Minneapolis said the strength of the labor market makes it clear that they have to continue raising rates
- Attention will also be on Biden's State of the Union Address against the backdrop of renewed tensions with China and the lack of agreements with the Republicans to raise the debt ceiling. The president is expected to focus on what has been accomplished in his administration including the infrastructure plan
- In Mexico, INEGI published GFI for November at 0.0% m/m (previous: 1.4%), with construction higher (1.4%) but with machinery and equipment lower (-1.0%). In annual terms this implies +6.6%. Moreover, INEGI also released private consumption for the eleventh month of 2022. It backtracked 0.6% m/m (previous: 0.1%), limited by imported goods (-3.7%). This implies a total increase in consumption of 4.1% in annual terms
