Financial Markets Daily

Main drivers for the financial markets today...

- Stocks markets positive, government bond yields negative and the USD lower, with investors taking in hawkish comments from various Fed members and data supporting a resilient economy suggesting further interest rate increases
- On the monetary front, yesterday Waller (Fed Board) and Bostic (Atlanta) mentioned that stronger economic data could drive rates even higher. Similarly for the Eurozone, Wunsch (ECB Board) declared that the expected 4% rate peak could be reached if inflationary pressures continue. Today we will have comments from Logan (Dallas), Bostic (Atlanta) and Bowman (Board Member)
- US imposed import taxes on dozens of Chinese companies, explaining that some of these companies engage in activities contrary to national security or foreign policy goals
- On economic figures, the agenda focuses on the services and composite PMIs for February. In the Eurozone these resulted with marginal declines, while in China we saw relevant advances, consistent with its reopening. Later in the day, we will know the US comparable metrics, as well as the ISM for services where we anticipate a moderate downward adjustment
