New levels to protect profits in our trade idea of paying 2-year TIIE-IRS

- We adjust the reference levels of our trade idea of paying 2-year TIIE-IRS (26x1) initiated on February 4th, with an entry level of 7.40%, target of 8.10%, and stop-loss of 7.15%
- Specifically, we establish a stop-win level of 7.75% to protect gains already accumulated by this position. Meanwhile, we maintain the target level unchanged
- At the current level of 7.85%, the position has accumulated net gains of 41.3bps after accounting for a negative carry and rolldown of about 3.7bps in the 13 days since the recommendation has been open. It is worth mentioning that, since the starting date, the cumulative movement has brought the security to +1.5σ of its 90-day average, reaching as high as 2σ on February 14th (7.99%)
- Although we continue favoring this recommendation, we do not rule out an extension of the relief seen in recent days, considering:
 - Uncertainty about geopolitical tensions between the US and Russia, which has increased risk aversion. If this exacerbates, sovereign bonds could benefit relative to equities;
 - The short-end of the curve is pricing-in accumulated hikes of +197bps and +159bps for Banxico and the Fed for the remainder of this year, respectively. Moreover, the market has increased the probability that both central banks will hike their reference rates by 50bps in March. This scenario looks hawkish compared to our expectations of a 25bps hike in both cases. Furthermore, we do not rule out an additional relief if the Fed minutes, to be released today, shows a less hawkish tone than market expectations
- At the same time, the originally planned investment horizon remains close to the Fed's next monetary policy decision, on March 16th, ahead of the ongoing debate around the pace and magnitude of the hiking cycle
