- Growth in October was explained by the recovery of domestic demand, reflected in the 3.3% growth within the services
- In seasonally adjusted terms, economic activity posted a 0.2% m/m expansion
- We continue to believe that the Mexican economy will show a more visible recovery

Growth in October was explained by the recovery of domestic demand. INEGI just released its Global Economic Indicator (IGAE) report for October, in which economic activity increased 2.3% yoy, above our 2% forecast (consensus: 2%). Taking a look at the breakdown, industrial production increased a scant 0.5% yoy, while the services sector edged-up 3.3% as shown in the table on the next page.

Industrial output still shows a weak growth. As we mentioned in our last IP report, the 0.5% yoy expansion in industrial production during October was explained in part by the 4.3% decline in mining activity, given the fall in Mexico's oil production, adding nineteen consecutive months in contraction. Moreover, Mexico's construction sector continues to recover although at a more moderate pace with a 2.2% expansion vs. the 3.4% observed on average year-to-date. However, manufacturing output decelerated significantly, expanding a scant 1.2% yoy as a result of the moderate growth in the U.S. manufacturing sector and a lower vehicle production. Finally, utilities expanded 4.5% yoy.

A more dynamic service sector. Services increased 3.3% yoy, as a result of a 9.2% yoy increase in housing and tourism services, while transportation and information in mass media services grew 6.4% yoy. Similarly, trade showed a 4% expansion. Moreover, recreational services edged-up by 6.6% yoy.

In seasonally adjusted terms, economic activity increased 0.2% m/m.

Taking a look at the breakdown, industrial output decreased 0.1% m/m, as a result of a 0.1% m/m growth in manufacturing production, a null growth in construction output, and a 0.6% m/m contraction in mining. Moreover, the services sector posted a 0.4% m/m expansion. Finally, primary activities fell 4.4% m/m.

With these figures, economic activity now shows a 3.9% 3m/3m saar growth vs. 3.3% in September. We highlight that the services sector posted a 4.1% 3m/3m saar expansion which reflects the better growth dynamics of Mexico's domestic demand (refer to the chart on the next page).

Looking ahead, we continue to believe that the Mexican economy will show a more visible recovery. Domestic demand has stand out as Mexico’s main growth engine. In particular, Mexican households are beginning to spend more given the significant gains in real wages, while firms have increased their investment spending given the more positive outlook that prevails for the Mexican economy. We believe that the recent upward trend in domestic demand will continue throughout the second half of the year given the following factors: (1) The recovery of the labor market; (2) the recent downward trend in inflation that will hold throughout the year; and (3) the recovery in private consumption reflected in the recent spike observed in INEGI and ANTAD sales.

Moreover, despite the recent deceleration in manufacturing output, other indicators show that this sector will show a more visible recovery. In this regard, we believe that the manufacturing industry will strengthen in the first quarter of 2016 given: (1) The recovery in external demand, particularly from the U.S.; (2) Mexico’s manufacturing exports will show a much more visible recovery given the recent and significant depreciation of the Mexican currency; and (3) the better growth prospects of the Mexican labor market, which will translate into a stronger domestic demand for manufactured goods.
